

They're preparing the New Year's Eve party at Peggy's Place.

Peggy: So, how are the preparations going?

Eddy: Preparations for what?

Jane: For the party tonight. You know, the one that's advertised outside in huge letters: Classic Hollywood New Year's Eve Celebration. You must have walked past it 15 times.

Eddy: Ooh! How exciting! Is it fancy dress?

Peggy: Yup. And there's a free drink for those in costume.

Eddy: Put that liquor on ice right now, because this little Bette Davis will be getting the biggest free drink of all.

Peggy: Eddy, I'd really like your help. If you could just stay for half an hour and supervise the decorations...

Eddy: Sure, bunny. What needs doing?

Peggy: Here's the list.

George: I need a ladder to put on the lights.

Peggy: Behind the bar, George. But be careful. It's a rubbishy old thing. Jane will have to hold it.

Jane: When do I get off? I need to go upstairs and change.

Peggy: Well, the longer you stand round yakking, the longer it will be.

Jane: OK. Keep your hair on! ... Come on, George! What are you going as tonight?

George: I thought I'd have a nice evening in.

Eddy: You're not staying in, George. That's pathetic. Personally, I see a likeness to Charlton Heston, and with those sexy shins, you could come as Ben Hur.

George: Where am I going to get a metal miniskirt and Roman sandals at four o'clock on New Year's Eve?

Jane: I've got a skirt you can borrow. I'll just go up to the flat and get it.

George: What are Phil and Dusty going as?

Peggy: The last I heard, it was the Blues Brothers. I wonder where they are. All they had to do was get a couple of CDs and some cocktail glasses.

Jane: Here you are, George. Try this!

George: It's a bit bright.

Eddy: Never mind. Come on! Let's see!

They're preparing the New Year's Eve party at Peggy's Place.

Peggy: So, how are the preparations going?

Eddy: Preparations for what?

Jane: For the party tonight. You know, the one that's advertised outside in huge letters: Classic Hollywood New Year's Eve Celebration. You must have walked past it 15 times.

Eddy: Ooh! How exciting! Is it fancy dress?

Peggy: Yup. And there's a free drink for those in costume.

Eddy: Put that liquor on ice right now, because this little Bette Davis will be getting the biggest free drink of all.

Peggy: Eddy, I'd really like your help. If you could just stay for half an hour and supervise the decorations...

Eddy: Sure, bunny. What needs doing?

Peggy: Here's the list.

George: I need a ladder to put on the lights.

Peggy: Behind the bar, George. But be careful. It's a rubbishy old thing. Jane will have to hold it.

Jane: When do I get off? I need to go upstairs and change.

Peggy: Well, the longer you stand round yakking, the longer it will be.

Jane: OK. Keep your hair on! ... Come on, George! What are you going as tonight?

George: I thought I'd have a nice evening in.

Eddy: You're not staying in, George. That's pathetic. Personally, I see a likeness to Charlton Heston, and with those sexy shins, you could come as Ben Hur.

George: Where am I going to get a metal miniskirt and Roman sandals at four o'clock on New Year's Eve?

Jane: I've got a skirt you can borrow. I'll just go up to the flat and get it.

George: What are Phil and Dusty going as?

Peggy: The last I heard, it was the Blues Brothers. I wonder where they are. All they had to do was get a couple of CDs and some cocktail glasses.

Jane: Here you are, George. Try this!

George: It's a bit bright.

Eddy: Never mind. Come on! Let's see!